Canadian election platforms ndp

The NDP have not released their full housing platform, but expect to do so in the coming days. They have, however, made several housing announcements beginning in June with a speech given by leader Tom Mulcair to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. They also included housing issues in a news brief on affordable housing and a report on fiscal spending commitments released in mid-September called A Balanced Fiscal Plan with Tom Mulcair. Homelessness and housing issues have also been mentioned in other plans, speeches, election debates and the past. Their original platform material also mentions housing related to the overall infrastructure. The NDP provided the COH table below to help us understand the various messages. They say: This table will help you piece together what we've said and how different local campaigns, housing websites, and stakeholders have put up the numbers in different ways. At FCM, we had included housing agreements with housing agreements that totaled $2.2 billion. Adding rental housing makes the total $2.725 billion. The Shelter Enhancement program funding was announced in Saskatoon in August as part of a commitment to promote gender equality. These are all new means in addition to the existing commitments made by the current government. It's also worth noting that there are 35,000 homeless people in Canada right now... We would put more money in people's pockets with quality, affordable child care and for the hundreds of thousands of people that we would provide a raise with a federal minimum wage of $15 an hour. Someone who works full-time should not live in poverty. This analysis is based on a review of past actions in the House of Commons, responses to CACHC and ACTO surveys, current election announcements and answers to questions from an NDP personnel policy analyst. It's a summary of the 2020 election campaign for the New Democratic Party.
